K-State heads to mountains for last Big 12 game

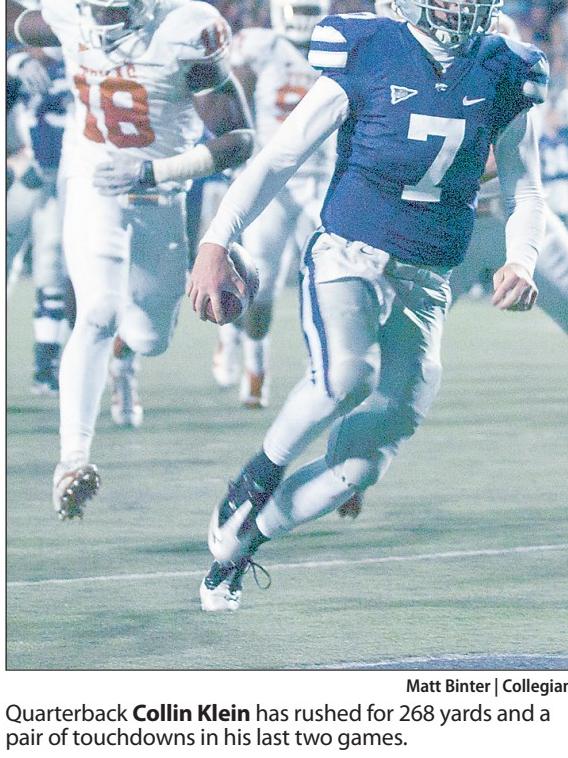

Ashley Dunkak
sports editor

This weekend, the Wildcats play their last Big 12 Conference football game of the season as they take on Colorado in Boulder, for perhaps the last time, since the Buffaloes are leaving the Big 12. Both teams have questions going into the game, and those questions revolve around the quarterback position.

As far as the Buffaloes, redshirt freshman quarterback Cody Hawkins is the son of head coach Dan Hawkins, whom Colorado recently fired after the team lost a dramatic game to KU after the Jayhawks scored 35 unanswered points in the fourth quarter.

Despite the havoc of losing a coach midseason, the Buffaloes bounced back with a win against Iowa State. K-State players such as linebacker Jarett Wright and defensive end Antonio Felder, both seniors, agreed the situation of losing a coach probably makes Colorado more dangerous than ever. Felder said the Wildcats have to prepare for the Buffaloes as if they are a top-25 opponent.

K-State head coach Bill Snyder said the firing of Hawkins had to be hard on his son, but that it could also have motivated him.

Matt Binter | Collegian
Quarterback Collin Klein has rushed for 268 yards and a pair of touchdowns in his last two games.

"I think it's awfully difficult, and I admire him for having the kind of performance under the circumstance," Snyder said. "I'm sure it was hard for him, but I'm sure it provided a great deal of motivation for him as well."

In general, Snyder had nothing but praise for the younger Hawkins, calling him very competitive, a quality leader and a "gym rat" type of guy.

"He's been around it his entire life," Snyder said. "He has the capacity to manage a ballgame quite well because of his knowledge of the system. He throws the ball well. He threw for nearly 300 yards against Iowa State. His numbers are going to put him as the leader passer in Colorado history. So he certainly has that capability."

The K-State defense will have to be on its toes because Snyder also said Hawkins is a good scrambler who makes some big plays off his scrambling and can keep himself alive and get throws off when he gets bounced out of the pocket.

As far as the Wildcats and the position of quarterback, the starting job is still up in the air. Two weeks ago, sophomore Collin Klein started, K-State snagged five interceptions, and the Wildcats defeated the Texas Longhorns in Manhattan on Senior Night. Last week, Snyder played both Klein and senior Carson Coffman, switching them throughout the game, and the Wildcats turned the ball over four times and lost against Missouri. Granted, the Longhorns are in a down year, while the Tigers are now No. 15 in the nation.

Snyder said both Coffman and Klein graded well when coaches looked over game film of the game, although he did not mention specific aspects that earned points for either player.

"I do not have a time limit on when we are going to make a decision," Snyder said. "But whenever it seems apparent to do what is best for us, we will make that decision."

He did say Klein has improved in practice, but Snyder needs to see more in game performance, which is a major factor.

"You need to be on the field for an extended period of time for that kind of improvement to become apparent," Snyder said. "I know the improvement is there. I have seen it in practice. Again, it is like taking the test — you can study great and have great study time, but you still have to take the test to find out if you knew what you thought you knew. He has made that kind of improvement, in both practice and in games."

Senior defensive end Josh Berard said the team was very disappointed with the loss at Missouri. On tape, the players saw a lot of missed opportunities, but Berard said they went back and corrected many of those.

"The energy level is high," he said. "Any team that loses has to change something. We either have to pick it up in practice or film study so we are policing each other so that we are completely focused when we go in there."

Kickoff is set for 1:10 p.m. Saturday.

Odds and ends: Snyder talks QB battle, CU's Hawkins

Justin Nutter
gameday editor

At his weekly press conference on Tuesday, K-State head coach Bill Snyder discussed a variety of topics, including the position battle between quarterbacks Collin Klein and Carson Coffman, as well as the play of Colorado signal-caller Cody Hawkins, who has had to deal with the firing of his father, former head coach Dan Hawkins.

Q: Can you talk about what you liked about the performance of each of your quarterbacks last weekend?

A: It's kind of like in the classroom. When you take a test, it's a passing grade or a failing grade. They both graded out quite high, really. But that doesn't take away the fact that, at that position, we made some dramatic mistakes that were very, very costly. So there's some balance there, I guess.

Q: Will Klein and Coffman continue to battle for the starting spot as the next game gets closer?

A: I don't have a time limit on when we'll make the decision. I just think that, whenever it seems to be apparent, we'll do what we need to do.

Q: Did Colorado look like it made some improvements in its win over Iowa State on Saturday?

A: I think they were emotionally different. I think schematically, that was an issue that I had some concern about. It doesn't appear that there was any dramatic changes schematically — maybe emphasis a little bit more in some areas than what they had been, but not really. I think it was just the emotional charge that existed.

Q: Can you talk about the performance of Colorado quarterback Cody Hawkins?

A: To me, Cody is a very competitive young guy. He's a quality leader. He has the capacity to manage a ballgame quite well because of his knowledge of the system and his knowledge of just being an athlete over an extended period of time. His numbers are going to put him as the leader passer in Colorado history, so he certainly has that capability. He makes some big plays off his scrambling.

Stephanie Carr | Collegian
Head coach Bill Snyder exits the field after K-State's loss at Missouri. Snyder said on Tuesday that the starting quarterback spot is still up for grabs.

Q: Do you think that Hawkins has responded well since his father was fired?

A: I think (dealing with that situation) is awfully difficult, and I admire him for having the kind of performance under the circumstance. I'm sure it was hard for him, but I'm sure it provided a great deal of motivation for him as well.

BY THE NUMBERS

Numbers to consider when K-State plays the Buffaloes on Saturday

-Games coached by Colorado interim head coach Brian Cabral

Cabral was put in charge of the program following the firing of former head coach Dan Hawkins on Nov. 9. In his first game as a head coach, Cabral led the Buffaloes to a 34-14 win over Iowa State.

35

-National rank of Colorado's run defense

The Buffaloes are allowing fewer than 135 yards on the ground per game. K-State head coach Bill Snyder said the Buffaloes have traded some size for quickness on their front line, and those guys receive support from a solid secondary.

-National rank of K-State's rushing offense

On the legs of senior running backs Daniel Thomas and William Powell and, recently, sophomore quarterback Collin Klein, the Wildcats' ground attack has been one of the best in the nation.

-Rushing yards by Thomas in 2010

With his second, third and fourth efforts on what seems like every single carry, he is averaging 5.2 yards per carry. The combination of him and Klein proved lethal for the Longhorns, and it seemed like it also produced good chemistry in the Missouri game. This week, we'll see how much Snyder chooses to use that pairing to the Wildcats' advantage.

-National rank of K-State's run defense

The Wildcats have struggled to keep scores down, allowing more than 100 yards per game more than the Buffaloes have as far as yards on the ground. However, with the recent performances of freshmen Ty Zimmerman and Tre Walker, the unit is looking up as of late, and those two could certainly be founding members of a good defense in the future.

-National rank of Colorado's rushing offense

The Buffaloes might not have quite the amount of firepower the Wildcats do in the rushing game, but they have one heck of a rusher in Rodney Stewart, who has more than 1,000 yards this season, but the next on the list is Brian Lockridge, who has slightly fewer than 150 yards through this season.

-Rushing yards by Stewart in 2010

This guy could pose problems for K-State, which has been gashed badly by several different rushers this season. While the defense seems to be improving of late, it will certainly have a test in Stewart.

-Consecutive bowl appearances under Snyder from 1993-2004

Obviously, the coach established a winning tradition and built this program to what it is now. With six wins, a bowl is far from certain, but the talk has been that these days, there are so many bowls, there might not even be enough eligible teams. However, with so many Big 12 Conference teams as contenders, the Wildcats had better take care of Colorado and North Texas in order to seal the deal.

-Consecutive games in which K-State has scored points

This statistic may seem irrelevant at first, but the Wildcats own the nation's 10th-longest scoring streak. The last time they were shut out was 1996 — the Big 12 Conference's inaugural season — when they lost 12-0 at Colorado. Ironically, this season, K-State has already seen the coach who led the Buffs to that shutout win. That man was Rick Neuheisel, who is currently the head coach at UCLA.

MATCHING UP

VS.

OFFENSE

DEFENSE

Despite sophomore quarterback Collin Klein's dominant performance against Texas on Nov. 6, the position battle is apparently still up for grabs.

On Saturday at Missouri, head coach Bill Snyder elected to start senior Carson Coffman, who sat out the previous game with a high ankle sprain. Coffman was ineffective from the get-go and was replaced by Klein. Once again, the native of Loveland, Colo., was nearly unstoppable in the run game, where he racked up 141 yards on 18 carries. However, despite leading K-State to its only two scores of the first half, Snyder continued to cycle Coffman into the game.

While it's unclear who will be under center for K-State on Saturday, one thing is for certain: the identity of the Wildcats' offense changes dramatically with Klein in the game. His quick feet and mobility give K-State a second credible rushing threat to complement senior running back Daniel Thomas, who ran for two touchdowns against the Tigers.

The Wildcats may have experienced some issues at quarterback this season, but those problems hardly compare to those of the Buffaloes.

Colorado started the season with junior Tyler Hansen — a proven threat on the ground and through the air — at quarterback, but lost the dual-threat athlete to a ruptured spleen on Oct. 24. He was replaced by senior Cody Hawkins, who has thrown for 1,182 yards and nine touchdowns this season.

Despite having to deal with Hansen's injury, the Buffaloes have received consistent production out of the backfield from junior running back Rodney Stewart. Stewart eclipsed the century mark on Saturday, and owns 1,035 rushing yards and eight touchdowns in 2010.

The stories for both teams' offenses are much of the same, but, despite its struggles, K-State has been more productive on the stat sheet. Look for the Wildcats to have a slight offensive advantage in tomorrow's contest.

The K-State special teams unit suffered a huge loss when senior kick returner William Powell went down with an injury against Texas. Snyder said during Monday's press conference that Powell would not be available for the remainder of the season. That leaves the Wildcats' return game up in the air. Freshman John Hubert handled kick return duties against the Tigers on Saturday, but seems to lack Powell's explosiveness.

Senior kicker Josh Cherry didn't really get a chance to bolster his stats last weekend, as he never attempted a field goal. He did connect on all four of his extra point attempts, but that's all the action he saw in the contest. Sophomore punter Ryan Doerr seems to have recovered from his injury against Texas, as he punted five times for an average of 41.4 yards against the Tigers.

The Buffaloes have not had anyone emerge as a leader in the return department, as six players have recorded at least one return. None of them have managed to break free for a touchdown, but Arthur Jaffee did manage to break off an 89-yard return earlier this season.

Kicker Aric Goodman has been reliable from short and mid-range, as he owns a 6-of-7 mark from inside 40 yards this season. However, he has been a liability from longer distances. He's just 2-of-4 from 40-49 yards and missed his only attempt from outside of 50.

Punter Zach Grossnickle has recorded 51 punts this season for an average of 39.3 yards, including nine punts inside the 20-yard line.

K-State loses a lot in Powell's absence, but the Wildcats should still have a slight advantage in the special teams department.

When the Wildcats and Buffaloes take the field Saturday, they'll do so with two of the Big 12's most unbalanced defensive units.

For the most part, the K-State defense has done enough this season to keep opponents from racking up tons of points, but stopping the run has proven to be quite a challenge for the Wildcats' front seven, as they currently rank next to last against among all Division-I teams in run defense. That could mean bad news, as Colorado's offense includes a 1,000-yard rusher in Rodney Stewart.

K-State has had plenty of defensive problems on the ground this season, but it has been serviceable against the pass. That could lead to an interesting matchup, as Buffalo quarterback Cody Hawkins has thrown just three interceptions during his final collegiate season. The Buffaloes have used a fairly balanced offensive attack — particularly since losing Hansen — so K-State will need solid production from both facets of its defense.

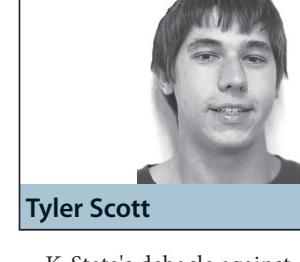

If there has ever been a game for Snyder to let the quarterbacks air the ball out, this appears to be it.

The Buffaloes have been less than effective against the aerial attack this season, as they rank No. 112 nationally in pass defense. If Snyder does elect to go to the air, look for the Wildcat quarterbacks to go to senior receiver Aubrey Quarles early and often. Quarles has emerged as K-State's top receiving threat since the team lost Brodrick Smith and Tramaine Thompson to leg injuries.

On the other hand, the Buffaloes have been fairly solid against the run this season, which could present a problem for the Wildcats' backfield. That problem would seemingly become much more manageable if Snyder elects to go with Klein at quarterback, but the weaknesses in the Buffaloes' secondary might give K-State's head coach enough reason to start Coffman.

Look for Colorado to have the defensive advantage over the Wildcats' struggling unit.

K-State should have no trouble winning against Buffaloes its head coach Dan Hawkins while sitting in last place in the Big 12 North with a 4-6 overall record and 1-5 in the conference.

However, the Buffaloes did pull out a 20-point victory against Iowa State last week. Quarterback Cody Hawkins threw for 266 yards and three touchdowns. He now has 1,182 yards and nine touchdowns on the season.

Running back Rodney Stewart also will pose a threat for K-State, as he has gained over 1,000 yards on the ground and eight scores. Like Stewart, the Wildcats' Daniel Thomas has also been solid for K-State on the ground running for 1,168 yards and 14 scores.

Hopefully the Wildcats can better focus this game and show the same intensity against Colorado that they showed against teams like Texas and Kansas this season.

Again, the rotation of quarterbacks by the Wildcats shouldn't be a part of their offense. If Snyder is to choose one quarterback to play, I think he should go with Klein. He put up another 100-yard performance on the ground, which set up two scores for Thomas. He is also a fan favorite since he has shown the ability to run on multiple occasions.

The passing game may need some work, but the team isn't a passing offense to begin with anyway. Although he doesn't pass the best, he looks more confident in the pocket and is able to elude defenders before getting sacked.

In this particular game against the Buffaloes, the offense shouldn't have any trouble against Colorado's defense. With the record it has, the Buffaloes have given up close to 400 yards a game with most coming through the air. K-State should handle the Buffaloes and pull out an easy victory.

PREDICTION

weaknesses, and will look to do so frequently on both sides of the ball.

Aside from playing at home, there is some extra motivation for the Buffaloes, who will look to send their seniors out with a win in their final home game, but it would take a big day — particularly on the defensive side of the ball — to accomplish that goal.

Bottom line: Colorado has likely spent this week preparing for two versions of K-State's offense: the Coffman-led, balanced attack and the Klein-led, run heavy unit. Regardless of which game plan Snyder goes with, the Wildcats should be able to leave Folsom Field with their seventh victory of the season.

Look for the Wildcats to win, and look for them to do so by more than one possession.

STRENGTHS

Colorado Buffaloes (4-6 Overall, 1-5 Big 12 Conference)

STRENGTHS

Quarterback: For the first seven games of the season, quarterback Tyler Hansen was a crucial part of the Colorado offense. Hansen, a dual threat option, gave the Buffaloes an offensive weapon on the ground, as well as through the air. However, his capabilities were neutralized when he suffered a ruptured spleen against Texas Tech on Oct. 23.

Fortunately for Colorado fans, senior Cody Hawkins proved to be more than capable as a replacement. Hawkins, who started a good portion of last season, has thrown for 1,143 yards and nine touchdowns, while only being picked off three times. He's not as mobile as his counterpart, but still has the ability to scramble and make plays on the run. Hawkins' passing ability should make for an interesting matchup against a K-State pass defense that ranks fourth in the Big 12.

Running back: Hawkins' success through the air this season has been made possible, in large part, due to the running ability of junior tailback Rodney Stewart.

Stewart posted 123 yards against Iowa State on Saturday. In doing so, he went over the 1,000-yard mark for the season. He's just the fourth back in the Big 12 to do so, joining K-State's Daniel Thomas, Oklahoma State's Kendall Hunter and Baylor's Jay Finley. He's also proven to be a receiving threat out of the backfield, as he's caught 25 passes for 222 yards this season. Look for Stewart to cause problems up front for K-State, which ranks next to last in the nation against the run.

Wide receiver: While nobody in the Buffaloes' receiving corps has really emerged as a go-to guy this season, Colorado still has several players who have proven themselves as reliable pass catchers. The charge has been led by senior Scotty McKnight, who leads the team with 43 catches for 537 yards and five touchdowns. Freshman Paul Richardson and junior Toney Clemons have also enjoyed solid seasons, as they have racked up 433 and 426 yards, respectively. K-State's secondary should have its hands full tomorrow against a receiving unit that contains plenty of ample targets.

Defensive line: Overall, the Buffaloes have been a middle-of-the-road team on the defensive side of the ball, but they have performed exceptionally well against the run in 2010. Leading a run defense that checks in at No. 35 in the nation is sophomore nose tackle Will Pericak. Pericak has recorded 32 total tackles, including two behind the line of scrimmage, and a sack. Working on either side of Pericak are ends Curtis Cunningham and Josh Hartigan, who have combined for 38 tackles and five sacks this season.

Linebacker: While it may not represent the Buffaloes' first line of defense, the linebacking corps has played a big role in the team's success against the run this season. Through 10 games, all three starters rank near the top of the roster in total stops. The group has been led by middle linebacker Michael Sipili, who currently tops the team's stat sheet with 76 tackles. Sipili, a senior, has also carded 2.5 sacks and recovered a fumble. Fellow linebackers B.J. Beatty and Liloa Nobriga have combined for 59 tackles, while Beatty leads the team with five sacks.

This could make for a very interesting battle against K-State's running game, especially if head coach Bill Snyder elects to give the run-heavy Collin Klein the starting nod at quarterback. This could make for a very interesting battle against K-State's running game, especially if head coach Bill Snyder elects to give the run-heavy Collin Klein the starting nod at quarterback.

WEAKNESSES

Offensive line: Experience does not seem to be an issue for Colorado's starting front five, which includes a senior and three juniors, but the Buffaloes' offense line has still had trouble containing opposing defenses this season. Stewart has averaged over 100 yards per game on the ground, but Colorado only ranks 89th in rushing offense as a team.

Things haven't been much better when the Buffaloes go to the air, as the line has allowed a total of 20 sacks in 2010.

Tight end: Junior tight end Ryan Deehan currently ranks fourth on the Colorado roster in receptions with 23, but he has not necessarily lived up to the preseason expectations that landed him on the Mackey Award watch list. His 23 receptions have only gone for 230 yards and he's only managed to reach the end zone once this season. K-State's defense has fared much better against the pass than it has against the run, so it's unlikely that the Buffaloes will air it out very often, but when they do, don't expect them to look for any big plays from Deehan.

Secondary: As good as the Colorado defense has been against the run this season, the Buffaloes have struggled mightily when opponents go to the air. As a team, Colorado ranks No. 112 in the country in pass defense, allowing 266.5 yards per contest. Snyder has yet to announce who will start at quarterback, but the Buffaloes' defensive statistics seem to favor Carson Coffman, who has proven to be a better passer than his counterpart, Collin Klein. Either way, look for K-State to throw against a team that has not figured out how to stop the pass.

FAREWELL TOUR

Tomorrow's trip to Boulder could be last one ever for Wildcats

The sun begins to set over Colorado's Folsom Field during K-State's game against the Buffaloes in 2008. With Colorado headed to the Pacific-10 Conference next season, tomorrow could be the Wildcats' final trip to Boulder.

Justin Nutter
gameday editor

Over the summer, college football enthusiasts watched intently as the NCAA landscape nearly underwent a shift that would have left a handful of Big 12 Conference teams, including K-State, searching for a home. While league commissioner Dan Beebe was able to work out a deal to keep the majority of the conference intact, two schools managed to get away from the conference they helped create in 1996.

The first school to jump ship was Colorado, which accepted an invitation to the Pacific-10 Conference on June 10. The Buffaloes seemingly made the switch to avoid falling into the same boat as the Wildcats, as Texas legislature was petitioning to move Baylor to the Pac-10 instead of Colorado, should any other schools choose to leave.

With that move taking place next season, the Wildcats find themselves preparing for their final trip to Folsom

Field for quite some time — perhaps the last time ever.

On the brink of what could be K-State's last trip to Boulder, Colo., Wildcats' head coach Bill Snyder took a moment to reflect on some of his team's most memorable road games against the Buffaloes — particularly a frigid, snow-covered game on Nov. 16, 1996, which Colorado won 12-0.

"That's one that seems to jump out in my mind," Snyder said at Tuesday's news conference. "Maybe it's because we lost it and not because it was snowy. We've played in the snow before."

Ironically, Snyder's most memorable game in Boulder also marks the last time the Wildcats failed to score a point. Since then, the team has scored in 174 straight contests, which stands as the 10th-longest streak in the country. Nebraska's stretch of 186 games is the only longer streak in the Big 12 Conference, but the Huskers are also packing their bags at the end of this season when they head to the Big Ten Conference.

Some of the Wildcats, who have already said one goodbye after playing Nebraska for the final time on Oct. 7, have said they are losing more than just a conference rivalry with Colorado's departure to the Pac-10.

"We're ready for this game on the road, up in Colorado," defensive end Antonio Felder said. "It's pretty out there. I want to go out there and get a win in a pretty stadium. I like the mountains. The weather and stuff doesn't really bother me."

While Felder said Colorado offers some unique geography to the Big 12 area, another Wildcat defender said he will have some extra personal incentive to win his final matchup against the Buffaloes.

"I'm looking at it like every other game, you know, but it is big though," fellow defensive end Josh Berard said. "For me, my games are counting down, but I'm going to go into it like I go into every other game — just prepare well and do everything I can to help the team."

Berard, a senior who has also seen time at linebacker, originally committed to Colorado out of high school, but later decided to come to Manhattan after two seasons at El Camino Community College. The California native said his decision to change his commitment has never been one he's regretted.

"There's always a little extra incentive when it comes to (playing Colorado). Last year, when we beat them, I was excited to be there. It does feel a little bit better. I've always been a very firm believer in my decision in terms of coming to K-State over Colorado. I didn't expect anything less."

This weekend's game will not be televised, but fans can still watch live action via webcast on kstatesports.com. Kickoff is set for 1:10 p.m.
